Hello Huge team,

I'm a designer with an engineering degree from the University of Waterloo, and I'm passionate about how products are made, and interacted with. As a holistic-thinking systems design engineer, I have a strong ability to understand customer needs, and translate them into actionable deliverables. This often involves a good amount of user research, and collaborating with all stakeholders throughout the design process.

In my most recent UX role at Noom—a health and lifestyle startup in New York—I worked on the product design team where I re-designed the meal-logging experience in the app. The UI patterns used here had to be carefully thought out so each use case would be intuitive, as well as elegant and simple.

Previously, I worked as the premiere UX Designer at KnowRoaming in Toronto where I was responsible as the sole designer for re-designing their mobile app from the ground-up. Everything from the core workflow, to the UI, icons and branding was reworked. I worked closely with developers, management and customer support in order to iterate designs, and achieve the best design possible.

I was also responsible at Sony, KnowRoaming, Noom, and Zynga, for designing and building prototypes, using various prototyping tools and occasionally writing production web-based code.

I hope I've shown here that I have the relevant experience and skills to be a great designer at Huge. I hope to chat with someone from the team soon.

Sincerely,
