Hello Deezer Team,

I am a UX and Product Designer from the University of Waterloo, with a big passion for music. I would love to work for Deezer, and help to build a product which gives many people instant access to all kinds of music.

In my most recent UX role at Noom—a health and lifestyle startup in New York—I worked on the product design team where I re-designed the meal-logging experience in the app. The UI patterns used here had to be carefully thought out so each use case would be intuitive. I created many mockups and prototypes using Invision, Marvel and Framer, and shared final Sketch files with developers using Zeplin.

Previously, I worked as the premiere UX Designer at KnowRoaming in Toronto where I worked on re-designing their app from the ground-up. Everything from the core workflow, to the UI, icons and branding was reworked. Naturally, this involved creating many UX maps, wireframes and moodboards, and investigation into a number of use cases. In my 8 months with the company there was a good deal of iteration, and collaboration with developers.

My first design internship was at Sony, where I worked on designing UI elements for their music player MediaGo. Major projects of mine were a UI re-design, and the design of a new music-discovery feature.

I've now recently finished my final year in Systems Design Engineering, a multidisciplinary engineering program, with an emphasis on design-thinking and user-centred design. In my final year design project, I designed and built Chameleon, a hearing protection device for industrial workers, which varies its attenuation based on the volume of the environment. For this project I performed much of the user research, as well as a large portion of the programming, electrical and mechanical design.

As I mentioned before, music is a big passion of mine. I perform semi-regularly at open mic nights, and this past April was a soloist in the ICCA finalist group, the Water Boys.

With already several years of in design experience, and a love for music, I feel I have the required skills, experience, and passion to be a successful design intern at Deezer. For more, please visit my portfolio online at adamthompson.ca.

Sincerely,

Adam Thompson
